Grey County Master Gardeners In Memoriam

Diane Everest - July 31, 1939 – May10, 2016

Grey County Master Gardeners remember Diane Everest. Diane died just 5 weeks after celebrating the 20th anniversary of the Master Gardener group she helped create. Her death was unexpected, shocking and saddened us all.

It has been said that in life there are participants and there are observers. Diane was an enthusiastic participant. We knew her best as a dedicated gardener. In 1996 she worked with a group of gardeners in Grey, Bruce and Huron counties to form the Tri-County Master Gardeners, which evolved into the Grey County Master Gardeners.

Diane was also part of the group that established the Rural Gardens of Grey and Bruce Counties, a network of private gardens open to the public. Her gardens at “Silk Purse Farm” were a popular stop for many.

Her interests were not limited to gardening. She loved reading, and was always ready with a recommendation for a new author she had enjoyed. Travelling was one of her passions, and to mark turning 70 Diane went on safari! She and her niece spent 5 weeks as part of a group touring Africa. Diane was fascinated by the sightings of exotic animals, and didn't mind the less than luxurious accommodations.

A deeply compassionate person, Diane spent many hours volunteering to help those in distress. Recently she drove children in care to supervised visits with their parents. Her calm, caring manner helped the children cope with these stressful situations. She was a regular volunteer at Hospice Wellington Palliative Care, where she died. Diane was never afraid to share her spiritual feelings, and in 2007 she became a Unity Church chaplain.

An animal lover, pets were always part of Diane's life, and she would be happy to know that her beloved cat, Rosie, is settling in with her youngest niece. Diane had a long and loving relationship with her three nieces, who will miss her greatly. As will we all.

A memorial tree will be planted in Diane's honour. We are also donating a book on shade gardening, a subject of special interest to Diane, to the Chesley Library where she was a member for many years.

MGOI Board Meeting

Date: Saturday, June 11, 2016

Members of the MGOI Board of Directors spent a beautiful Saturday away from their gardens, indoors, on June 11th. Members met for the day in midtown Toronto. The morning was dedicated to planning ahead for the future; the board members' grey matter was hard at work brainstorming a vision statement for MGOI. It is not easy to develop a statement that envisions the way forward for now and into the future, that embodies who we are and what we do.

Administrative matters followed in the afternoon.

Connie Hunter, Kelly Noel, Rhonda Grein (Recording Secretary), Suzanne Zacharczyk, Sue Flinders-Adams

Katherine Mathewson, Claudette Sims, June Streadwick, Pam Love, Tena Van Andel

Supporting our Groups

Claudette Sims, Halton Region MG

*President, Master Gardeners of Ontario Inc.
(MGOI)*

In early June, Pam Love, Director of Membership and I met with a Master Gardener group that was struggling, in order to offer them strategies and support. This group is not alone in having membership issues. Attracting and retaining new members and getting people to “step up” to take on roles are two of the major challenges faced by many Master Gardener groups.

At the beginning of the Master Gardener program in Ontario, OMAFRA supported groups with personnel, tools and ideas. When the government stopped funding for MGs, groups were supposed to be supported by Zone Directors. As a new Zone Director myself, I had few ideas or skills to help struggling groups. Now the “membership team” - Director of Membership Pam Love, the Regional Directors, and the committee members - have enabled us to start developing the needed skills, tools and resources dedicated to supporting groups. Having a Director of Membership is awesome, especially when that director has the energy, ideas and inspiration of someone like Pam!

We hope that sharing our experience will help other groups who are struggling.

Six (6) questions were sent to the group in advance. I'd like to share their answers and our thoughts with you.

1. What three things do you value most about being a (group) Master Gardener?
 - The people
 - The horticultural side, the sharing of ideas
 - Inspiration
 - Personal touch
 - Feels good to share knowledge/help people
 - Educational aspect of meetings
 - Supporting the community

The first question was meant to remind the group why they joined Master Gardeners. When these members talked about their group, their faces lit up. They loved being Master Gardeners and they loved their fellow group members. 😊

Attention should really be paid to these answers as they show the group's values. If “education” is listed as something members value, that makes it a priority at meetings.

2. How can you contribute to keeping the group going?
 - The group agreed to share the responsibility of chairing meetings and organizing the educational component; each member would be responsible for one month
 - Dates of meetings would be set ahead of time so that everyone could reserve the date

Like many groups, no one wanted to “step up”, so we ‘broke up’ the role of coordinator. We suggested that as a start the responsibility for the meeting could be shared. One member could commit to sending out an agenda, being responsible for an education piece and chairing one meeting. This responsibility would rotate each month.

We reminded them about the excellent resources on the Coordinators' Corner; there are suggestions on “How to chair a meeting” and a number of “Meeting Starter” ideas to add fun and an educational component to meetings.

3. What stops you from “stepping up”?
 - Work schedule
 - Time

The group agreed that if the person responsible for a meeting had last minute work commitments, then someone else in the group would step up and lead the meeting that had been planned.

4. Is disbandment an option?
 - They agreed that they were not ready to disband at this time.

We were prepared to offer advice on how to disband a Master Gardener group so we were pleasantly surprised by their reaction - I think they were too! This is a very friendly, nice group. They are very passionate about their work. A few are charter members of the group (30 years). The group has a healthy financial balance and shouldn't need to fundraise for a time. If they get back on track, at the very least, they will feel better about their group.

5. What were the first signs that might have indicated that your group was in trouble?
- The group felt that a past coordinator followed policies too narrowly and as a result people resigned
 - In fighting at meetings
 - Some meetings consisted only of business; there was no educational component
 - The group had difficulty attracting new members
 - If new members did join or show interest, they didn't stay with the group
 - Their tried and true volunteer opportunities had changed in their community
 - Some group members felt the community no longer needed them
 - No one in the group was prepared to take over as coordinator

If your group has any of these warning signs, they should be taken seriously and dealt with. Once a group falls below a certain number of members, it becomes more difficult to help it back to health:

- There are policies and procedures to follow, but when issues do arise, the coordinator and the group should problem solve re: how to support members where possible.
- Issues regarding difficult members or concerns about coordinators can't be ignored. The excellent PowerPoint presentation about Dealing with Difficult Volunteer Situations on the MGOI website could be shown at a meeting to help everyone cope and deal with the problem. Acquiring these kinds of skills adds extra value to being a MG.
- Without an interesting educational component, new members won't be interested in staying, so we offered alternative educational ideas for meetings.
- If your former community partners are no longer able to work with you, you need to move on! Focussing on solutions rather than the problem is key to effecting positive change. Make a plan to turn things around.

6. What could have been done differently? These last ideas are a summary of what we thought might have helped this group:

- Having an effective chairperson could have reduced tensions in the group. While many of us may think we know how to chair a meeting, there is a lot more to it than following an agenda.
- Having a rotating chair makes all members appreciate and understand the duties and responsibilities of chairing.
- Clearly communicating expectations on how members are to conduct themselves at meetings is key.
- Having strategies and procedures for dealing with and "releasing volunteers" who are negatively affecting the group could have helped.
- Having varied and interesting educational components of meetings, i.e. using Internet resources/videos, speakers, tours.
- Brainstorming how to find advice clinic opportunities in the community, i.e. working with seniors, hospice patients, children, giving advice to new home owners (perhaps via a real estate contact); reaching out to your Regional Director or other groups in your area; reviewing the group activities in the annual reports or Awards of Excellence entries on the MGOI website; posting questions on the coordinator or MG list for ideas.
- Having individual members "step up" to contact various new partners; breaking up roles by activities; having mentors.
- Having a plan to make a plan for your group.

Does your group need help? Taking action now could get your group back on track, so that it can continue to inspire and support gardeners in Ontario! Groups can ask for assistance from the Regional Director or Director of Membership. They are working as a team to support MG groups.

Two out of 4 regions have a Regional Director and we are actively searching for volunteers to make it 4 out of 4.

The board is here to offer you assistance where needed and we have ideas and tools to help you!
